SUMMARY

Administrative and program support professional with direct experience in documentation, data tracking, and multi-system coordination. Managed records and progress notes for hundreds of students across concurrent programs; built original systems from scratch with no template or prior framework. Comfortable working independently in a remote setting, handling diverse workloads with accuracy and a high level of professionalism. Drawn to mission-driven organizations where organized, detail-oriented support makes a real difference for families.

Hiring Team

Dear Hiring Team,

Family Voices exists because families navigating healthcare systems for children with complex needs are too often left to figure it out alone. I know that experience from the inside. Having spent years coordinating specialist care across fragmented systems for my own health needs, I understand what it means when the support infrastructure actually works, and how much harder everything gets when it doesn't. That is why this role, at this organization, is meaningful to me in a way that goes beyond the job description.

The administrative and data coordination work this position requires is work I have been doing in demanding environments. At Fowler Elementary School District, I maintained detailed progress records on 400 students across reading intervention and technology programs simultaneously, kept project files current across multiple platforms, and ran six intervention groups per day independently throughout the school year with 100% participation. That level of concurrent tracking, in a fast-moving, high-interruption environment, with real accountability for follow-through on each individual, is exactly what supporting a national program team's data and logistics work requires. In my subsequent work running an independent digital business, I managed all operations solo: content publishing, record-keeping, order monitoring, and multi-platform compliance, applying the same precision to communications and reporting that I had developed in the classroom.

On the communications side, I built and managed multi-channel content across social media, SEO-optimized product copy, and email, growing monthly page traffic 60% over the business's life. Writing for a diverse audience, with attention to tone and accessibility, is a skill I developed working with families and students across a wide range of backgrounds in Phoenix. I hold Microsoft 365 and Google Workspace to a high proficiency level and have a demonstrated record of adopting new platforms quickly across every role I have held. Salesforce and Monday.com are platforms I am prepared to learn; the pattern of moving into unfamiliar technical environments and building competency fast is consistent across my work history.

I am organized, remote-capable, and committed to doing this kind of work with care. I would be glad to speak further about how my background fits what the team is building.

Respectfully,

Emalyn Lindeman
